

Social and Personal

PRECEDING the Thanksgiving ceremony to be given under the auspices of the Richmond Alumni of the University of Virginia, a vaudeville entertainment will be presented in the auditorium of the Jefferson Hotel at 8:30 o'clock on Thanksgiving evening, at which the visiting university men and those of the football teams will be guests of honor. The auditorium will be decorated with chrysanthemums and palms and with the pennants and colors of the two universities.

The Glee Club of the University of Virginia will be present, and music and college songs will diversify the performance, which will be humorous in character and enlivened by many witticisms and local hits. All the belles and beaux of the town will be present to do honor to the visitors and the occasion.

The show will most appropriately round up the day and serve as a prelude to the dance of the evening. Entertained by Miss Lamb.

Miss Emma Gray White, who is visiting Miss Eloise Williams in Norfolk, Va., was guest of honor on Friday at a luncheon given by Miss Lucy Lamb, of Fairfax Avenue, that city. The table was attractively arranged with American Beauty roses, and covers were laid for six. Those present were Miss White, Miss Powell Byrd, of Gloucester; Miss Margaret Tabb, of Gloucester; Miss Eloise Williams and Mrs. E. T. Lamb.

Guest of Honor. Mrs. George Mason, of Albemarle, formerly Miss Sophy White, of Richmond, who has been spending some time here, and is now visiting friends in Newport News, divided honors with Mrs. Douglas Gordon, of Baltimore, at a luncheon given last Friday by Mrs. A. L. Hopkins, of Newport News.

The dining-room was decorated with pink roses and smilax, and after the luncheon bridge was played, Mrs. J. L.

able to marry. Susan, the second daughter, cherished for him, unsuited, a passionate affection. So she schemed to break the engagement between Sylvia and Gunning and to marry instead a marriage with a young Italian, the Duke di Ginestra. She succeeded. Sylvia became the bride of the Italian nobleman, and was happy in spite of her bad behavior.

But Susan got very little good out of her deceit except living in a fool's paradise for a little while. The end of the broken engagement was that Daffy, ignorant, but sincere, desiring to atone for Sylvia's bad faith, married Hugh herself.

Two years later, when Daffy had still not grown up to the measure of womanhood, she and her husband went to Africa, where Hugh Gunning had rather an important contract and his wife, her first experience. Gunning had some trouble in opening her eyes to the manner of man she fancied herself in love with, but his entire success was worth his pains. And afterwards husband and wife understood each other better.

The book, on the whole, deals with temperamental differences in different types of humanity, and is full, all through of the good humored cynicism of a writer who looks at her world with a jaundiced eye, but who in addition indulgent kindness for the faults and weaknesses of her fellow-mortals.

"Son of the Wind." By Lucia Chamberlain. Published by the Bobbs-Merrill Company, Indianapolis. $1.25.

Most unusual in plot is the latest novel by the author of "The Coast of Chance" and "The Other Side of the Door." The action revolves around the search for a wild horse somewhere in the far West, where young Carron, the hero, whose whole enthusiasm is given to his "profession" of capturing and breaking horses for market, goes in search of a wonderful stallion. The "most wonderful" in the world, as the story of how he is directed to "ask at Rader's," the mysterious deserted hotel on a side road, of his strange reception there and of his meeting with Blanche Rader, the daughter of the house, serves as the very beginning to whet the curiosity and arouse the interest of the reader.

One would expect that, in his ardent pursuit of this same elusive girl, Carron would lose interest in the pursuit of the horse; but he does not. He hangs tenaciously to his original purpose, even while his new love is gradually absorbing his time.
